

What Your Scores Mean

A guide to reading your Who Am I Now? results.

You answered twenty statements across the four stages of becoming: Mindset, Behavior, Systems, and Strategy. Your assessment gave you a score in each one, and a total across all four. This guide tells you what those numbers mean. To use it, find each of your four scores below and read the range it falls into. Each range explains where you are in that stage and the most useful next step. Then read your total score at the end for the overall picture. There are no good or bad numbers here. Each one shows you where you are right now and where to begin.

Mindset

Your inner world: the beliefs and stories that shape what you think is possible.

Score 5 to 9 Early Stage

Your Mindset score suggests that the inner work of this journey is largely still ahead of you. That is not a criticism. It is actually the most important thing you could know right now.

Most people in this stage are carrying beliefs about what they are allowed to want, who they are allowed to become, and what is realistic for someone at their age or in their circumstances. These beliefs were not chosen. They were inherited from family, culture, experience, and other people's definitions of a good life. And they run in the background, shaping every decision you make without you ever examining them.

The work at this stage is not about making big changes. It is about becoming aware of the stories that are running your life. You cannot rewrite a story you do not know you are living.

Your next step: Start with the "Who Am I Now?" Starter Kit. The first module is a guided Roles vs. Self Inventory that helps you begin separating who you actually are from who you have been told to be. This is the beginning of the beginning, and it is exactly the right place to start.

Score 10 to 14 Developing

Your Mindset score tells a story of awakening. Something has shifted for you, possibly recently, possibly gradually over time. You are more aware than you used to be of the scripts you have been living by. You can feel the difference between a decision that is genuinely yours and one that is made for the audience in your head.

But awareness is not yet consistency. There are still moments when the old story wins. When you default to what is expected rather than what you want. When the voice that says who do you think you are gets louder than the one that says this is my life.

That back-and-forth is the work, not a sign you are getting it wrong. The Mindset stage is not a switch that flips. It is a practice of returning, again and again, to what is actually true for you.

Your next step: The Unscripted Intensive is designed for exactly this stage. Three hours of guided inner work that takes your growing awareness and gives it structure, language, and a direction to move in.

Score 15 to 18

Established

Your Mindset score shows that you have done real work in this area. You have examined the beliefs you were handed. You have questioned the scripts. You have given yourself at least some permission to want something different. That is not a small thing. Most people never get here.

The question at your stage is not whether you have done the inner work. It is whether the rest of your life has caught up with your thinking. Many people find that their Mindset is well developed but their daily behaviors and the structures of their life still reflect who they used to be rather than who they are becoming. If that resonates, your work is not more self-examination. It is translation. Turning what you know into how you live.

Your next step: Look at your Behavior and Systems scores. If either of those is lower than your Mindset score, that is where your energy belongs right now.

Score 19 to 20

Embodied

Your Mindset is a genuine asset for this journey. You have examined your beliefs, questioned your inherited stories, and given yourself real permission to want more. This is the foundation everything else is built on, and yours is solid.

The work at your stage is not more inner examination. You are ready to move. Your energy belongs in Behavior and Systems, where the internal shifts you have made start to show up in how you actually live.

Your next step: Look at your lowest scoring section. That is where your attention belongs next.

Behavior

Your daily choices: how much of your living reflects who you are becoming.

Score 5 to 9

Early Stage

Your Behavior score suggests that even if some awareness has begun to arrive, your day-to-day life is still largely shaped by old patterns. The habits, the defaults, the ways of moving through a Tuesday, still reflect who you have always been more than who you want to become.

This is one of the most common places people get stuck. The thinking starts to shift but the living does not follow. And the reason is rarely a lack of motivation. It is that behavior change without inner work is willpower, which runs out. And behavior change without structural support is wishful thinking, which fades. The Behavior stage works when Mindset is doing its job underneath it.

The work here is not about making dramatic changes overnight. It is about finding one place where you can choose differently today. Not perfectly. Just differently.

Your next step: Before focusing on behavior change, check your Mindset score. If that is also low, start there. If your Mindset score is higher, the Unscripted Intensive will help you translate your inner awareness into concrete behavioral shifts with structure and support.

Score 10 to 14

Developing

Your Behavior score shows that you are in motion, even if the motion feels inconsistent. You are making some choices that reflect who you want to become. You are questioning some of the old patterns. There are moments where you choose yourself. And there are moments where the old default wins.

That inconsistency is not weakness. It is what the middle of this stage actually looks like. Behavior change is not linear. It is a practice of noticing when you default to the old pattern, returning to your intention, and trying again. The fact that you are doing any of this at all puts you further along than most people ever get.

What you need at this stage is not more motivation. It is structure and accountability. Something that holds the intention when the old habits pull you back.

Your next step: The Unscripted 6-Week Program is built for this stage. Each week gives you a structure that holds the behavioral work so you are not relying on willpower alone.

Score 15 to 18

Established

Your Behavior score shows that your choices have started to reflect the person you are becoming rather than the person you have always been. You are making intentional decisions. You are honoring your own needs at least some of the time. You are moving.

The question at your stage is whether the structures of your life support what you are doing. Many people at this level of behavioral development find that they are working hard to make intentional choices in an environment that was designed for who they used to be. The effort required is high because nothing around them has changed. If that resonates, Systems is where your focus belongs.

Your next step: Check your Systems score. If it is lower than your Behavior score, your environment needs to catch up with your choices.

Score 19 to 20

Embodied

Your behavior reflects genuine intentionality. You are making choices that align with who you want to become, not just who you have always been. That is one of the hardest things this journey asks of anyone and you are doing it.

The question now is whether the structures of your life support what you are building, or whether you are still doing all of this by sheer force of will in an environment that has not yet caught up. Check your Systems score. That is likely where your next area of focus lives.

Your next step: Look at your Systems and Strategy scores. The lowest of the two is where your energy belongs right now.

Systems

Your environment: the routines, spaces, and relationships around you.

Score 5 to 9

Early Stage

Your Systems score tells you that the structures of your daily life, your routines, your environment, your relationships, and how your time is organized, still largely reflect who you used to be rather than who you are becoming.

This is not unusual. Most people start changing internally long before their external reality catches up. The thinking shifts. The intentions shift. But the calendar still looks the same. The relationships still operate the same way. The spaces where you spend your time still feel like they belong to the old version of you. And that gap creates a kind of daily friction that can make everything harder than it needs to be.

The Systems stage is about redesigning your environment to support your becoming rather than your staying. It is not about blowing up your life. It is about making small, deliberate changes to the structures around you so that they are working with you instead of against you.

Your next step: The Unscripted 6-Week Program dedicates a full week to Systems work, helping you identify exactly which structures need to change and how to change them in ways that are sustainable rather than overwhelming.

Score 10 to 14

Developing

Your Systems score shows that you have started making changes to the structures of your life, but those changes are not yet consistent or comprehensive. Some things have shifted. Other things still look exactly like they always did. There may be areas of your life where the environment actively works against the person you are trying to become.

That is the nature of this stage. Systems change is slow and it requires intentionality about things that most people treat as fixed, who you spend time with, how your days are structured, what your physical spaces signal to you about who you are. None of those things are actually fixed. They just feel that way.

Your next step: The Unscripted 6-Week Program or The Off-Script Club will give you the community and structure to make Systems changes that stick. You do not have to redesign your life alone. In fact, doing it with others is significantly more effective.

Score 15 to 18

Established

Your Systems score shows that you have been thoughtful about the structures of your life. Your environment, your routines, and your relationships are starting to reflect who you are becoming rather than who you have always been. That is meaningful work and it shows.

At your stage, the question shifts from how do I change my environment to what am I building in it. If your Mindset and Behavior scores are also well developed, you are likely ready to move into the Strategy stage, where the inner work and the structural work start to take the shape of an actual next chapter.

Your next step: Check your Strategy score. If it is lower than your other scores, that is where your focus belongs.

Score 19 to 20

Embodied

Your daily life is structured to support who you are becoming. Your environment, your routines, and your relationships are aligned with your values and your intentions. That is rare and it is not an accident. It is the result of deliberate choices made over time.

You are ready for Strategy. The foundation is in place. Now it is time to build.

Your next step: If your Strategy score is lower than your other scores, that is the work in front of you. The Unscripted 6-Week Program or a private conversation about the Mastermind would be a natural next step.

Strategy

Your direction: how clear and concrete your next chapter has become.

Score 5 to 9

Early Stage

Your Strategy score suggests that while you may have a sense that something needs to change, you do not yet have a clear picture of what you are building or where you are going. The direction feels murky. The next step feels unclear.

This is not a failure of imagination. It is usually a sign that the earlier stages, Mindset, Behavior, and Systems, need more development before Strategy can take shape. You cannot build a life you cannot yet see. And you cannot see it clearly until you know who you actually are, how you actually want to live, and what structures will support that.

If your scores in the earlier stages are also low, that is your answer. Start from the inside and work your way forward. Strategy will emerge from that work. It rarely emerges from thinking harder about it.

Your next step: Start with whichever earlier stage scored lowest for you. The Unscripted Intensive is a good place to begin if you want structure and support for that early work.

Score 10 to 14

Developing

Your Strategy score shows that a direction is starting to form. You have some sense of what you want. There are things you are working toward, even if they feel tentative or not fully formed. The picture is coming into focus but it is not yet clear.

This is one of the most hopeful places to be on this journey. The work is working. The direction is emerging. What you need now is not more thinking about where you are going. It is a structured container for turning what is emerging into something concrete, a specific plan for a specific next chapter that belongs to you and no one else.

Your next step: The Unscripted 6-Week Program is built for this exact stage. Week four and five are entirely dedicated to helping you articulate your specific direction and build a 90-day plan to begin moving in it.

Score 15 to 18

Established

Your Strategy score shows that you have a genuine sense of direction. You know what you are building, at least in broad strokes. You are making decisions that move you toward it. The next chapter is taking shape.

At your stage, the work is about deepening and specificity. Moving from a general sense of direction to a concrete plan. From knowing what you want to knowing exactly what your next 90 days look like. From private intention to lived reality.

Your next step: The Mastermind or a private strategy conversation with Nicole would give you the level of personalized support that turns a developing strategy into a fully realized next chapter.

Score 19 to 20

Embodied

You have a clear sense of direction, a concrete plan, and you are in motion. The strategy for your next chapter is not just a thought. It is something you are actively building.

What you likely need most at this stage is not more planning. It is community, accountability, and the kind of ongoing support that keeps you moving when the old scripts try to pull you back. You have done the work. Now you need people who understand the journey and can walk with you as you live it.

Your next step: The Off-Script Club is built for you. Monthly live sessions, a structured community, and ongoing access to Nicole as you build the life you have designed.

Your Total Score

Add your four scores together. Your total, from 20 to 80, falls into one of these.

Score 20 to 39

Just Beginning

Your overall picture shows someone near the start of this work, and that is exactly where becoming begins. The scripts you were handed still run much of the show, and most of the life around you reflects who you have been more than who you are setting out to be. This is a starting line, and you are standing on it on purpose. The most useful move now is to find your lowest score and begin there. It is almost always Mindset, because everything else builds on the inner work, so that is where your momentum starts.

Score 40 to 55

In Motion

Your overall picture shows real movement underway. You have started to question the old scripts, your choices are beginning to shift, and parts of your daily life are catching up with who you are becoming. The motion is genuine even when it feels uneven, and uneven is what the middle of this work looks like. What helps most now is structure and company, something that holds your intention when the old patterns pull. Find your lowest score, give that area your attention first, and let the Unscripted 6-Week Program carry the work week by week so you are not doing it on willpower alone.

Score 56 to 69

Taking Shape

Your overall picture shows someone well into this work. You have done real thinking, you have changed real behavior, and the life around you has started to reflect the person you are becoming. This is not the beginning anymore. The work at your stage is about specificity and follow-through, turning a well-developed general direction into a concrete next chapter. Look at your four scores and find your lowest one. At your level, the lowest score is rarely a weakness across the board. It is usually the one area that has not yet caught up with the rest of you. Close that gap and the whole picture moves together.

Score 70 to 80

Living It Out

Your overall picture shows someone living this work. You have done deep work across all four stages: you know your own mind, your choices reflect it, your environment supports it, and you have a real sense of where you are headed. The work now is about sustaining what you have built, keeping your momentum when the old scripts try to pull you back, and surrounding yourself with people who understand the journey. The Off-Script Club and the Mastermind are built for exactly this, becoming who you are alongside others doing the same.

Wherever your scores land, here is what matters most. You still have time to become who you actually want to be. You can begin from exactly where you are. And you can do this with people around you.

My Unscripted Life™ was built for exactly where you are.
